Harbor + [a positive feeling]?

2016?8?23? · Hello everyone: I had always thought that "harbor", when used as a verb, carried a negative connotation and, therefore, should be used only with words conveying a negative feeling, such as grudge or contempt until I found this: "Similarly, Russians harbor both admiration and contempt for

make good shore

2017?4?3? · Hello, How does it sound if I say "they made good shore" to emphasize that some ship really arrived at a good place after having a hard time in the sea (instead of only using "make shore")? I am asking it because I didn't find any Google hit with this exact expression. If ...

harbor / port

2011?4?11? · No son exactamente lo mismo. Harbor puede usarse para referirse a un puerto natural, mientras que port no. Paralelamente, port no sólo se refiere al puerto como estructura para el tráfico marítimo, sino también a un pueblo o ciudad portuaria, lo cual no es aplicable a harbor. Estas son sólo las diferencias básicas. Hay más matices, por lo que os recomiendo ...

2013?7?17? · Hello. I'm not sure when to use 'and' and when to use 'to' . Normally, we use 'and' to connect actions, in which one of the actions follow by another, like: 1. I waved goodbye and went down the stone harbor steps. 2. We stopped and bought some bread. 3. He called and invited me to a party
